

Interfaith Conversations on Peace and Reconciliation

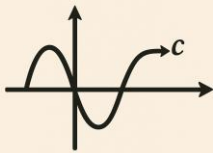

In dialogue, we allow what is beautiful, peaceful and meaningful in the other to transform us. Thich Nhat Hanh

Overview

Join us for an inspiring interfaith conversation designed to explore our collective futures through meaningful dialogue. Together, we will:

- engage in discussions that matter
- uncover a greater wisdom that emerges from the richness of our diverse perspectives
- share our insights and connect with one another
- harness the collective intelligence needed to address our challenges

Speakers

Listen to the voices of three leaders, each representing a different faith tradition

Mona Singh

A proud member of the Sikh community, Mona has a passion for interfaith dialogue. She firmly believes that all religions, at their heart, share the same principles for how one should live—with kindness, compassion, and integrity. To her, the diversity found in various faiths is not a source of division, but a powerful force for unity. Through her efforts, Mona seeks to bring people of different backgrounds together, building bridges of understanding and respect across cultural and religious lines.

Elise Strevel

Elise was raised in the Roman Catholic tradition through college, then explored different religions and philosophies for decades, never quite settling on any one until attending a lecture on Buddhism in 2004. She has been a student of Buddhism since. It felt like the culmination of all she was seeking. She has been the Outreach Coordinator at the Buddhist Center for most of that time. Elise is also on the board of the Triangle Interfaith Alliance, and a member of Interfaith Creation Care of the Triangle and TWIG

Dr. Herbert Harris

Dr. Herbert Harris, a Unity practitioner, is a graduate of Columbia University in New York City and a retired attorney. He has written numerous books, including "How To Make Money In Music," a guidebook to the music industry, and "The Twelve Universal Laws of Success," a Bible-based approach to success principles and the laws under which they operate. This success book has attracted worldwide attention and has been translated into numerous languages, including Chinese, Italian, Romanian, and Spanish. Dr. Harris is also the author of Solving the Race Issue in America, a brief, historical, spiritual, and social overview of the Black American experience and prospects for change and growth.
